

Burn down Chart

During this final sprint, we observed that the velocity of our team was different from the last sprint. Since this was the last sprint, we aimed to refactor and optimize our work to ensure a seamless final presentation. In particular, we focused on revamping the frontend of our website, which involved cleaning up the code and improving the overall format.

Additionally, we made small changes to the functionality of the program to enhance its convenience for users. We also invested a significant amount of effort into improving the UI/UX, which included implementing a range of new features. These efforts resulted in consistently high velocity, as we worked hard to complete all of these tasks in a timely and efficient manner.

We worked long hours during this sprint to ensure that we made the necessary changes and improvements to the project. Our hard work has paid off, and we have accomplished a lot in this final sprint. We want to continue this momentum and put in extra effort to ensure a successful final presentation. We will use the burndown chart to track our progress and ensure that we are on schedule to complete all of the remaining tasks.

Overall, we are proud of the work we have accomplished during this sprint and are excited to showcase our final product.